

Numbers Game

Wellian Wiranto

+65 6530 6818

WellianWiranto@ocbc.com

What's next for Malaysian politics and economy?

- As if the virus scare is not enough, Malaysia has had to experience an overdose of bizarre political drama of late. The PM quit – because opposition ganged up to get him to stay longer – only to come back in an interim role. All eyes are now on whether there will be a new coalition or a snap election.
- The acute uptick in political uncertainty could not have come at a worse time. The economy was already reeling from a slowdown even before the threat of global pandemic stares at us. Now, the outlook may dim further, with investment activities likely to be hit the most, if the uncertainty persists.
- Given the multifront challenges facing the economy at a time of relative political vacuum, the central bank's role will be ever more crucial. Apart from its steadying hands on the currency markets and such, the economic one-two punch could compel BNM to ease further, on March 3rd.

'Curiouser and curiouser!' cried Alice (she was so much surprised, that for the moment she quite forgot how to speak good English).

Alice in Wonderland, by Lewis Carroll

Twists and Turns

A lot has happened and nothing has happened at the same time. That might be the summary of what has taken place in Malaysian politics recently.

First, a quick rundown on what had happened over the weekend:

- Opposition parties, UMNO and PAS, reportedly met with some members of the Pakatan Harapan (PH) ruling coalition, including Azmin Ali of PKR and Minister Muhyiddin Yassin of Bersatu at Sheraton Hotel Petaling Jaya.
- The agenda was apparently to form an alternative coalition to support continued leadership under PM Mahathir Mohamad. The catalyst was said to be attempts by some within the PH coalition to compel the PM to hand over the reins to the long-time PM-in-waiting Anwar Ibrahim.
- The "Sheraton Gang" proceeded to have an audience with the head of state, the Agong, ostensibly to present their case for a new government. What transpired is not known precisely, but the attempt apparently fell flat, perhaps because the PM himself was not present.

Fast forward to Monday this week, and the hitherto silent PM Mahathir shocked the country by submitting his resignation to the Agong, only to be reinstated right away as the interim PM.

Hence, nothing has changed on the fact that Mahathir remains the PM, albeit with the moniker interim attached to the title. Still, the rest of the cabinet has been disbanded, which leaves Malaysia technically without much of the government at this point.

As of today, the Agong is still in the process of interviewing each and every one of the 222 MPs to ascertain where their support lies in terms of PM candidate, or if they prefer to have an election.

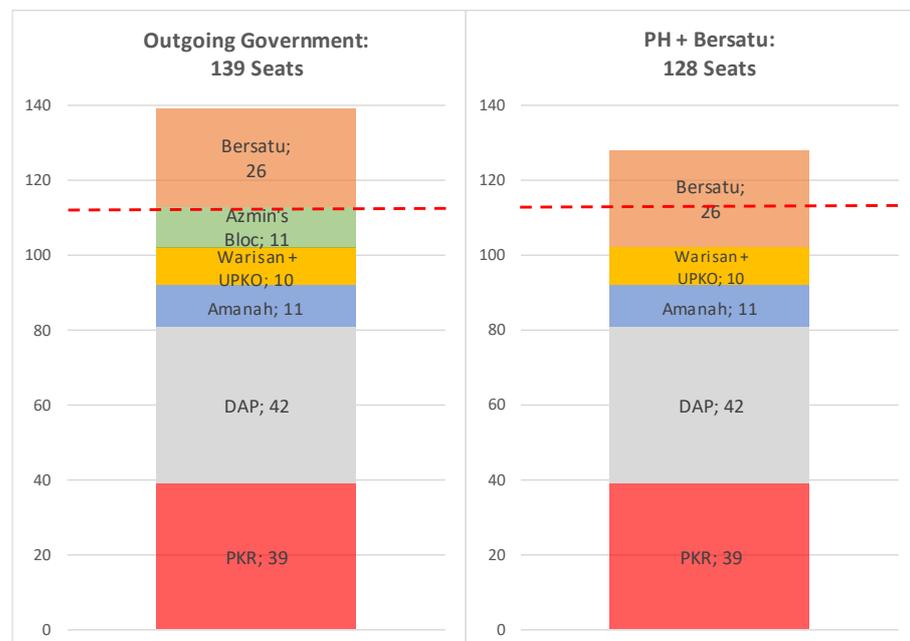

While, at one point, it appears that every single political group across the spectrum was adamant that Mahathir should still be the PM – which would have left him spoilt for choice in forming a new coalition – the situation changed yet again.

UMNO and PAS which had backed the purported move to form a new coalition with Bersatu and Azmin’s bloc announced that they would now opt for a snap election, instead, perhaps sensing that they can improve their seat counts following a string of recent by-election wins.

From the perspective of the economy, a new election is by no means a panacea, however.

Unless it brings forth a massive win for one of the major parties, with seat wins of close to 90, allowing the party to be on a strong footing despite having to take on a coalition partner or two, we might well see a repeat of the current political carousel. Given the fractious state of play, however, such a victory for any party looks unlikely.

Figure 1. Seat counts of selected parties in the Dewan Rakyat

Source: OCBC, Dewan Rakyat. Note: The red line denotes the 112-seat threshold needed for a majority in the 222-seat parliament.

Malaysia

26 February 2020

Hence, political uncertainties would dominate for a while, unless we see a resolution of the current quagmire in one way or another soon. For instance, to play the numbers game optimistically, if Mahathir manages to charm at least some of his Bersatu party members to switch their support back to what remains of the PH coalition now, a new government can be formed. Latest reports suggesting that PKR members may prefer Anwar as the PM immediately may put paid to that scenario too, however – highlighting just how fluid the situation is.

If the uncertainties persist into March and beyond, however, economic growth will suffer more than it already has from the slow momentum from last quarter plus the ongoing Covid-19 outbreak scare that is reverberating through the world economy.

We have already shaved down our Q1 growth forecast to 3.5% yoy and for the full-year GDP to grow at 4.0% from 4.2% previously. If the political situation does not improve in the coming week or two, we might have to take into account a greater hit on the investment and consumption fronts in particular.

Moreover, over the medium term, Malaysia could stand to gain from a reconfiguration of regional supply chain, particularly in the technology sector. It has already benefited from the recent trade war-induced FDI relocation, but unless it can put its house in order, politically speaking, the momentum might be lost.

With those risks in mind, we think the chances of BNM pursuing another rate cut in the upcoming meeting on March 3rd, to bring the OPR to 2.5%, has risen sizably. A quick political resolution may dampen the chances somewhat, but the pandemic threat that is looming larger now would still tip the balance for a cut in aggregate.

Treasury Research & Strategy

Macro Research

Selena Ling*Head of Research & Strategy*LingSSSelena@ocbc.comTommy Xie DongmingHead of Greater China Research*XieD@ocbc.comWellian WirantoMalaysia & Indonesia*WellianWiranto@ocbc.comTerence WuFX Strategist*TerenceWu@ocbc.comHowie LeeThailand, Korea & Commodities*HowieLee@ocbc.comCarie LiHong Kong & Macau*carierli@ocbcwh.comDick YuHong Kong & Macau*dicksnyu@ocbcwh.com

Credit Research

Andrew Wong*Credit Research Analyst*WongVKAM@ocbc.comEzien HooCredit Research Analyst*EzienHoo@ocbc.comWong Hong WeiCredit Research Analyst*WongHongWei@ocbc.comSeow Zhi QiCredit Research Analyst*ZhiQiSeow@ocbc.com

This publication is solely for information purposes only and may not be published, circulated, reproduced or distributed in whole or in part to any other person without our prior written consent. This publication should not be construed as an offer or solicitation for the subscription, purchase or sale of the securities/instruments mentioned herein. Any forecast on the economy, stock market, bond market and economic trends of the markets provided is not necessarily indicative of the future or likely performance of the securities/instruments. Whilst the information contained herein has been compiled from sources believed to be reliable and we have taken all reasonable care to ensure that the information contained in this publication is not untrue or misleading at the time of publication, we cannot guarantee and we make no representation as to its accuracy or completeness, and you should not act on it without first independently verifying its contents. The securities/instruments mentioned in this publication may not be suitable for investment by all investors. Any opinion or estimate contained in this report is subject to change without notice. We have not given any consideration to and we have not made any investigation of the investment objectives, financial situation or particular needs of the recipient or any class of persons, and accordingly, no warranty whatsoever is given and no liability whatsoever is accepted for any loss arising whether directly or indirectly as a result of the recipient or any class of persons acting on such information or opinion or estimate. This publication may cover a wide range of topics and is not intended to be a comprehensive study or to provide any recommendation or advice on personal investing or financial planning. Accordingly, they should not be relied on or treated as a substitute for specific advice concerning individual situations. Please seek advice from a financial adviser regarding the suitability of any investment product taking into account your specific investment objectives, financial situation or particular needs before you make a commitment to purchase the investment product. OCBC Bank, its related companies, their respective directors and/or employees (collectively "Related Persons") may or might have in the future interests in the investment products or the issuers mentioned herein. Such interests include effecting transactions in such investment products, and providing broking, investment banking and other financial services to such issuers. OCBC Bank and its Related Persons may also be related to, and receive fees from, providers of such investment products.

This report is intended for your sole use and information. By accepting this report, you agree that you shall not share, communicate, distribute, deliver a copy of or otherwise disclose in any way all or any part of this report or any information contained herein (such report, part thereof and information, "Relevant Materials") to any person or entity (including, without limitation, any overseas office, affiliate, parent entity, subsidiary entity or related entity) (any such person or entity, a "Relevant Entity") in breach of any law, rule, regulation, guidance or similar. In particular, you agree not to share, communicate, distribute, deliver or otherwise disclose any Relevant Materials to any Relevant Entity that is subject to the Markets in Financial Instruments Directive (2014/65/EU) ("MiFID") and the EU's Markets in Financial Instruments Regulation (600/2014) ("MiFIR") (together referred to as "MiFID II"), or any part thereof, as implemented in any jurisdiction. No member of the OCBC Group shall be liable or responsible for the compliance by you or any Relevant Entity with any law, rule, regulation, guidance or similar (including, without limitation, MiFID II, as implemented in any jurisdiction).